FUNERAL OF GEORGE N. TERRY.

One of a Noted Family of Bonifaces, He Began as Bellboy in New York.

Center Moriches, L. I., June 7—The remains of George N. Terry were brought here from Atlantic City, N. J., where he died Saturday last, and interred in Mount Pleasant Cemetery yesterday afternoon. The Rev. Mr. Geddes read the Presbyterian burial service. No public notice had been given, and but few beside relatives were present.

Mr. Terry was one of a family of born hotel men. His great grandfather came from Connecticut in about 1783 and built a hotel in the eastern part of what is now Center Moriches, and the hotel is yet there—Ketcham's hotel it is now called. His grandfather, his father, his brothers, were all hotel men, and, while he was unmarried and had no sons to train up in the business, several nephews are now successful hotel men. He began as bell boy in the old United States, and became lessee. He was in that house man, and boy, over twenty years. Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr., and he were great friends, and he advanced money frequently to Vanderbilt while the old Commodore lived, and when a settlement was effected with the other heirs, it is said, Vanderbilt repaid him in full. It is said that no other man could dissuade young Vanderbilt from any project in mind, but that he would always act on Terry's advice.

Two brothers and one sister survive him—Henry S. Terry of Brooklyn; William Terry of Buffalo, and Mrs. George T. Osborn of East Moriches.
